Example of Strip Shred

Conventional shredders cut documents into consistent strips producing a shred that is far from secure.

Example of Vecoplan Shred

To remedy this security issue, a second shredder must be used and the shredded material must be turned 90 degrees and shredded again. This process is referred to as "Cross Shredding". Although cross-shredding is more secure than strip shredding, security concerns still exist.

Vecoplan's secure Dump-And-Run method offers a solution that is more secure than cross shredding in a single pass. Because the discharge is screened, there is no possibility of documents escaping the shredding process. This method cross-shreds in one pass with variable and consistent shred size through interchangeable screens. Large, bulky binders with metal rings, entire security and recycling containers, full bales and even full rolls can simply be dumped into the hopper without any material preparation.
